

JACKSONVILLE SCHOOL.

IN the spring of 1866, the property known as the Fairview Seminary, at Jacksonville, Centre county, was bought by Rev. D. G. Klein, with a view of opening a school for soldiers' orphans, under the auspices of the State. Superintendent Burrowes visited the place on the tenth of May, inspected the buildings, and gave directions as to changes and additions to be made, in order to render the accommodations sufficient for one hundred and fifty pupils. The verbal agreement then entered into between Mr. Klein and Dr. Burrowes was in substance this: The buildings were to be put in readiness, and orders of admission were to be issued to orphans on the first of June of the same year. The children were to be under ten years of age, and were to be maintained, educated, and clothed for $150 each per annum.

Immediate steps were taken to provide the stipulated conveniences. Early in June the orphans began to arrive, and were received and cared for, though everything was as yet in an unfinished state. After a number had been admitted, the Superintendent advanced funds to enable Mr. Klein to go forward with the necessary improvements. The school filled up slowly, only about fifty having been admitted before vacation of that year.

After vacation, there was a gradual increase in the number of pupils until the close of the first year, when there were one hundred and seven on the roll of the school. But now a new order of things was inaugurated. The Legislature reduced the allowance from $150 to $125 per annum, a new Superintendent was appointed, and a somewhat different management required. The reduction in the rates was at that time peculiarly hard, as flour then cost $15 per barrel, and other provisions, wages, and lumber were at the same extravagant figures. What to do was a serious question. Some $5,000 had been put into the improvements and furniture, and if the school should now close, this would be nearly all lost.

In the emergency, the new Superintendent, Colonel McFarland, was consulted, and he advised the Principal, Mr. Klein, to go on with his improvements, so as to be able to admit one hundred and fifty pupils. In consequence of this advice, and hoping a larger school would pay its way, an additional expense of several thousand dollars was incurred.

By the 1st of September, 1867, the number of pupils had slowly gone up to one hundred and nineteen. But now there was a transfer, which reduced the number to ninety-two. During the year 1868 the average number in actual attendance was but a little rising one hundred, and the following year the number reached but one hundred and thirteen. In 1870 a further reduction of rates was made, giving to schools admitting orphans under ten years of age but $115 for each child, per annum, for education, maintenance, and schooling. The school had not hitherto paid expenses, and Mr. Klein, being burdened with an ever-increasing debt, was compelled to resign, and the children were taken to other schools on the 3d of January, 1871.

During the existence of the school there were admitted ninety-four boys and eighty girls, making a total of one hundred and seventy-four.

We regret we are not able to give the names of the faithful teachers and employees connected with this school, no list having been furnished us.
