

MANSFIELD SCHOOL.

THIS institution, located at Mansfield, Tioga county, had its origin in a desire to establish a model school for the State Normal School of the Fifth District. Its proprietor, Prof. F. A. Allen, who was, at its commencement, Principal of the Normal School, finding it impossible to make a satisfactory model school out of the pupils in the town, determined to procure, if possible, a limited number of soldiers' orphans for whose education and maintenance the State had made provision. To this end, he made application to the Superintendent of Soldiers' Orphans for twenty-five boys and twenty-five girls; and, on the 1st of October, 1867, the school was opened. At the close of the year, the number in attendance was sixty-three. The educational department was at once organized as a model school, and placed under the charge of normal graduates, and this, at the same time, constituted the school of practice for the seniors of the Normal School, they, in turn, teaching quite a number of classes.

The difficulties to be met and overcome were not unlike those experienced at other schools, and it is not a matter of surprise that considerable time elapsed before the heterogeneous material could be moulded into one harmonious whole. Not only were the pupils strangers to each other, and to those in whose care they were, but teachers, and those employed in the domestic and industrial departments, were unfamiliar with their new duties, and had to learn by the slow process of experience. During the first year, it was difficult to obtain suitable help, especially for the work out of the school-room, and frequent changes were necessarily made before this could be accomplished. To properly adjust the various departments, so that they could run without friction, was not an easy task. No one connected with the institution had had any practical knowledge of the workings of a school of the kind, and, notwithstanding the rules and regulations furnished by the State authorities, it required time and patience before a satisfactory organization could be perfected. At length, however, perfect system was established, under the judicious care and persistent efforts of those who had the matter in hand; and to Mrs. S. M. Etz, a soldier's widow, is especial credit due for her valuable pioneer services in giving shape and character to the institution while yet in its infancy.

The building at first occupied had been used as a store, and, though remodelled, was poorly adapted to the purposes of a home and school. This was no small hindrance to immediate success. The children, fortunately, did not realize their inconveniences, and were contented and happy. Very soon after the opening of the school, it was found impracticable to limit the number of pupils to fifty, as was originally designed, and other and larger buildings were purchased and erected, as the demands of the school enlarged, till there were accommodations for over two hundred pupils.

In 1869, when Prof. Allen resigned the Principalship of the Normal School, the orphan school was changed from a school of practice to a school of observation, — the results being far from satisfactory, while the orphans were experimented upon by fledgling seniors. At this time the school, educationally, was recast and divided into grades, each having a permanent teacher. In 1870, five grades, or divisions, of the school were made, each occupying separate rooms, under a special teacher, and a method of teaching adopted upon the plan of what Prof. Allen calls "a new departure in education." This consists in classifying all the studies under three heads, viz.: language, mathematics, and physical science. In regard to this pet scheme of his, Prof. Allen, in one of his annual reports to the State Department, says:

"Our school consists of five grades; these constitute separate and distinct departments, and are under the immediate supervision and instruction of one teacher in each. The number of pupils in each grade is about forty. Three distinct departments of study are daily pursued in each grade, viz.: language, mathematics, and science. Believing, as we do, that the elements of these departments of study may be taught successfully to the youngest child permitted to enter our schools, we select from each such branches as seem best to meet the wants of our children, and such as we deem best calculated to develop harmoniously the faculties of body, mind, and heart. Physiology, botany, and local geography in science—the elements of geometry and processes in arithmetic and its tables in mathematics—the constant correction of improprieties in speech, and the no less constant work of teaching how to tell what they know in good English, together with the training of each child to write, so that all his school requests are in writing, and in the department of language we find not only highly useful, but practicable. Our teaching, in the main, is given without books. The subject of study, when taken up, is first taken into the mind and heart of the teacher, who seldom fails to give to it a life and freshness that appetizes the class, thus creating a desire for more. After each class recitation; pupils are required to reproduce in writing the lesson before the class. It will be readily seen that this process secures a closer attention during recitation, greater accuracy in language, and clearness in thinking. It makes our teachers more studious in preparation, for without this daily exercise the teaching must be a failure. They must, of necessity, be far more accurate in statement and definition. But the limited space of this report will not allow of further details touching this 'new departure.'"

A more complete account of the educational work of this school than can be given in this brief sketch may be found in the Circular of Information of the Bureau of Education, November 6, 1875, page 83. The "new departure" is a feature of the school of which Prof. Allen is proud, and earnestly and persistently advocates; and he, being a successful teacher and a veteran in the cause of education, is certainly entitled to a candid hearing, and his utterances are worthy of the thoughtful attention of educators of youth.

Two brass bands have been organized at this school, a set of instruments costing two hundred and eighty-five dollars purchased, and the boys frequently discourse excellent music, to the evident delight of the inmates of the institution and the surrounding villages.

It is to the credit of this school that, from its origin, it has been in harmony with the rules issued from the State Department,—that teachers and other employees should, in the dining-room, occupy the heads of tables, eat the same kind of food as the children, and instruct them in the proper use of the knife and fork, and other proprieties.

In the summer of 1872, a farm of one hundred and fifty acres, a short distance out of town, was purchased, in order to afford employment and instruction to the boys. Here they work the allotted two hours daily, under the eye of a kind-hearted, intelligent, and practical farmer, and receive that assistance and direction that a father is wont to bestow upon his own sons. The girls are carefully taught to do all kinds of housework and plain sewing.

As an act of justice, we would state, before concluding, that Prof. V. R. Pratt, a Normal graduate, took charge of this school as Principal at the beginning of the second year, and continues to serve in that capacity. During the past few years, he has had the entire control and management, as much so as though he were proprietor. He possesses fine qualifications as a teacher, and is a kind-hearted, genial gentleman.
